

Greek Logic: An Archeological View
by Potluri Rao In Seattle ©2018 (CC BY 4.0)

Greek logic, also known as Aristotle's logic, is the current European logic; it is the exact opposite of the ancient Hindu logic that was deliberately destroyed by the Europeans.

Hindus (DNA F) lived only in Peninsular India for over 60,000 years. They were highly advanced logic-based cultures of visionaries, pioneers, and explorers. They lived in peace and tranquility as democratic republics with open borders as one giant family. They were the cream of humankind. They invented Hindu logic 4,000 years ago. They never had the European trademark concepts of king, war, weapons, religion, or god.

Grandhika was the language of Hindus. The Brahma Sutra, Mundaka, Mandukya, Katha, and Gita were books on Hindu logic composed in Grandhika.

Sanskrit was a synthetic language, a mixture of only the Grandhika and the Avestan, a dialect of South Bactria (Avesta); it was invented by the Greeks (R1b) to deliberately destroy the Hindu logic books. Brahmins (Z93) were Avestans kicked out of Avesta into Kashmir for their unethical and immoral social behavior of robbing Avestans with fictional stories and rituals called "Yajna" to market their fictional gods, Vishnu, Shiva, and Indra, as snake oil. The Greeks in Kashmir employed the delusional Brahmin refugees to trash Hindu logic into Greek logic. All the Sanskrit literature was Greek-financed, Brahmin-invented rubbish to destroy the Hindu logic.

Sanskrit has only Avestan and Grandhika. Using scientific tools, we purged Avestan from Sanskrit to excavate fragments of the Grandhika logic books. We reconstructed the now-lost Hindu logic from the excavated fragments.

In Hindu logic nothing is sacred. All knowledge is subject to logical scrutiny. There are only two states that are mutually exclusive: (1) Prakriti (Matter) of physical material commonly known as nature and (2) Purusha (Mind) of mental abstraction of speculation, intuition, or inspiration. Mind has no Matter; Matter has no Mind. Knowledge (Satyam) is the relationship between Mind and Matter. Satyam is neither Matter nor Mind; it is both. Satyam is like a molecule consisting of one atom of Mind and one atom of Matter. The atoms must be compatible for the molecule to form. Hindu logic is the chemistry of Satyam molecules.

An idea conceived in a human mind as a speculation is called a "statement." It is an atom of Mind. To form a molecule, there must be a compatible atom of Matter. If a compatible atom does not exist in nature, then the statement has no logical value and must be discarded as nonsensical.

A statement that is not empirically verifiable is called Avidya. A statement that is empirically verifiable is called Vidya. Avidya is an atom; Vidya is a molecule. Hindu logic is a process to establish whether a statement is Vidya or Avidya.

If a statement is empirically validated with a demonstrably compatible Matter atom, then it meets what is called a “Necessary” condition. If a necessary statement is empirically proven to be unstable under certain demonstrable conditions, then it meets what is called a “Sufficient” condition.

In Hindu logic nothing is sacred. Hindus never had a sacred book. Hindu minds were constantly challenging every statement; it was called “critical thinking.” Statements are classified into only three categories: (1) nonsensical, (2) necessary, and (3) necessary and sufficient.

Greek logic is the exact opposite of Hindu logic. It starts with the assumption that certain statements are of divine origin, called “Axioms,” and must be accepted by blind faith as true. Greek logic uses deduction (Aristotle’s logic) to derive consequences of a stated Axiom. Anyone who doubted the validity of an Axiom was beheaded.

Under Greek logic, anything written in Sanskrit is an Axiom, and must be accepted by blind faith as sacred and of divine origin and cannot be challenged.

Under Hindu logic, nothing is sacred; there are no Axioms; all statements must be empirically validated; anything written in Sanskrit is a nonsensical statement and must be discarded. Only the mentally retarded would accept the following by blind faith as being of divine origin (Axiom): (1) monkeys with cow’s tails, (2) people with multiple heads, faces, and arms, (3) people riding mice, birds, and flying chariots, (4) guided missiles controlled with mantras, and (5) Munis attaining supernatural powers with meditation (tapas).

All the Sanskrit literature was reduced to ashes as non-verifiable and nonsensical when tossed in the fire of Hindu logic. Hindu logic was the exact opposite of Greek logic. Hindu logic based only on empirically verifiable facts is Science. Greek logic based on Axioms of divine origin is Religion, the exact opposite of Science.